 «ACREE TO DISAGRE» or «Acreeing to Disagreeâ» is an English phrase that refers to the resolution of a conflict (usually a debate or a quarrel) in which all parts recognize that further conflicts would be useless, ineffective or in any case undesirable. They can also remain in friendly relations while continuing not to be agreed on unresolved issues. Origin the sentence «consent to disagreement» It appeared in print in its modern meaning in 1770 when, to the death of George Whitefield, John Wesley wrote a commemorative sermon that has recognized, but minimized the doctrinal differences of the two men: there are Many doctrines of a less essential nature ... in these we can think and let think; We can «to agree with not to be agreed." But, in the meantime, we warmly keep the essential ... [1] Wesley contained the phrase between quotes, [2] and in a letter subsequent to the brother Charles, attributed to Whitefield (presumably George Whitefield): Â «If you are agreed with me, well: if not, we can, as it said Mr. Whitefield, to be an agreement of not being a agreement. "[3] Whitefield had used in a letter Gius June 29, 1750. After all, those who live in peace must agree to disagree on many things with their workmates, and don't let the little things siparize them or save them. "[4] Although WHITEFIELD and WESLEY seem to have made the expression in its usual meaning popular, it appeared in print much earlier (1608) in a job of James Anderton, written with the name of John Brereley, a priest. Its use is missing the subsequent implication of tolerance of different beliefs, but. And since our opposing doctors agree not to be agreed in their translations, condemning each other (as before) to each other ... (The Protestants Apologie for the Roman Church Deuided in Tre Seuerall Tractes) [5] The phrase « Accept to disagree, "" which expresses the modern idea of "accepting to disagree," "appeared at the beginning of the 18th century in a sermon by John Piggott: « And now why not agree to disagree, without enmity Or contempt? Â »[6] (Sermon on Union and Peace, preached to different congregations, 17 April 1704). Expresses a similar idea without the game of words. It's also connected in the sense lâ modern use of the Latin phrase modus vivendi (lett. Â way of life '), normally reserved for informal and temporary arrangements in political affairs. [7] Economist Frank J. Fabozzi argues that it is not rational for investors to accept disagreement; must work towards consent even if they have different information. For financial investments, Fabozzi states that investor overestimation in their capabilities (irrationality) can lead to "acknowledging that they do not agree" if the investor thinks they are smarter than the market.
