Hi everyone, I tried to squeeze the battery as I can from my note 4, I just got GSAM to monitor my processes and see what the battery could eat. Inside the app has a section called App Sucker, under the Android system header there is a subsection called "silent table" along with many others, does anyone know what it is? Can you be killed or if it's even needed? There are other 30 processes of something as part of the Android system. I'm not rooted and AfaiK simply have to endure these things. The battery life is not exceptional for me at the moment, which is why I am digging a little deeper to find the culprit. Any help would be appreciated. Screen Shots of Drain and Apps in use Screen Shots of Drain and Apps are completely rooted and I have many battery life apps like Greenify, amplify, I have my DVF disabled, using most of the part of the good connectivity network, Using most of the time, tons of bloatware have frozen and still coming about 3-4 of sot. Don't worry about man, you may absolutely be in a worse situation. Reactions: Dladz Aye You're right, I just expected more. Hey, I need help. In the service code * # 9900 # I hit "enables silent recording from start-up" and now I can't disable it?! I get a notification toast at start-up that silent recording cannot start checking my debug setting. I hate this and there is a running service called "siletlogging" siletlogservice and com.sec.modem.settings. It is annoying and taking resources. Any help would be great! I went or the silent logging app into the AP manager and the canceled cache, tried the distribution of the cache partition on the phone itself, etc. I tried enable debugging and then enable silent recording and disabling, but I can't stop the silent racing logging? I tried to go to the silentoggcom file and changing from 1 to a 0 but it didn't work. I don't want to reset my phone to cancel this. Arg, I'm an idiot! This is a T-Mobile Note 3 warehouse running Android 5.0. A thousand thanks! 5 Å * ok I think I solved it. I went to the manager application in Settings and went to AppSgonagent app, DeviceTest, factory mode, service mode and silent recording and deleted data and caches in each. So I deleted all the cache data in the storage settings, then went to the restore (turn off the phone and hold the volume upward and at home while pressing and tightening the power until you see the small restore Text on the Samsung logo It is possible to release) and even the cache of the canceled system and also Disabled CP that also accesses there for a good fit. When I restarted the phone, silent recording was disappeared and my normal system resources had returned to normality. The man was lucky! Shutter no more but at least if someone else has a solution that is why I'm leaving this here for future people who confuse themselves like me! Hello, so I have a samsung galaxy s3 and not if I had progressed with the battery. I read a method to solve it and compose * # 9900 # and accidentally turned on "silent register" on predefined mods. Now, every time you gotten my phone I get a notification that said "Silentlog started" and I can't remove it unless you force the "Ultracfg" app. Do you know how to deactivate this option so I don't get this notification? Thanks. 07-05-2014 11:57 like 0 Hi, so I have a Samsung Galaxy S3 and not if it had progloms with the battery I. Apple a find my iPhoneÅ ¸ is a good and many security applications, such as Avg Mobilation, able to trace a phone in seconds. But what if someone else is tracing you? There is some chance your boss or spouse could be spying everything you do on your phone? It is easy to do. Spy applications are abundant and can imperceptibly keep track of text and emails, location, websites you visit, which is called and which photos and videos shoot. The problem is that these applications are difficult to identify and perform invisibly in the background. I decided to follow my son and installed, an application on the HISA phone called Laucass phone control (free on Google Play). Of course, secretly intercept electronic communications without the knowledge of the person and the consent is illegal, so I told my son I was doing and that I ia d use it only if I had a good reason. Every day I receive e-mails indicating my Sona S position as heÅ ¸ s using the phone in the world. I can click on these links in my email to see via Google Maps where it is (although very rarely). I could also configure the application to send me the data of everything else heÅ ¸ s doing on the phone of him, but thatÅ ¸ s not something that I personally Needa or Wanta do. Signs The phone may have been compromised someone took on or the phone I had to have my Sona s phone in hand to install Android Phone control. Once you have activated, however, there is no icon in the application launcher. The apps app up with the name of Å ¸ Android SystemÅ ¸ in the Applications Manager so that it doesn't seem suspicious. If you think someone could do such a thing when youÅ ¸ is not to pay attention or asleep, protect the phone with an access code that is easy to guess. (Editor's note 9/26/12:. To confirm that you have spyware and not a standard Android application with the same name, follow these steps to open the indicator application (dial the phone number) (note of the Editor 8/28/13: see our in-depth study of mobile security applications for more details on 9 of most of the common spyware programs and how to detect them) (note of the editor 12/16/14 (Josh Kirschner):. In Some of my comments below, I noticed the unlikely to spy on iPhones that have not been jailbroken. However, since many of these observations have been made, some holes have been identified in iOS that exploit iPhone connection for networks And trusted devices to allow someone with access to the network or device to download significant ... Quantity of personal data Jailbreaking The iPhone was not held fortunately, those holes were corrected in iOS 8. For furtherior The information, see: The phone is acting strangely to always turn off, illuminating for any reason, suddenly getting much brief battery life or running Hot when youÅ ¸ is not to use it can indicate hidden processes are running in the background. Its data usage rockets for any reason this could be because the phone is check-in with someone else, using the GPS and sending their text messages or e-mails that communicate where you are e You are making youÅ ¸. What to do if you suspect that the phone being monitored the best thing to do is perform a factory reset, which you can find as an option in your phonea s settings. Know, though, that thus doing all the data stored on the phone are losing, so you come back to first. If youÅ ¸ e king using Apple iCloud or Android 4.0, objects like contacts, photos and music are synchronized and saved in the cloud automatically. But if you have an old phone, youÅ ¸ e Vorr you to export contacts before making a factory reset. There are various ways to do this depending on what phone youÅ ¸ e is using and which operating system operating running. If you are not sure, get help from your cellular supplier; They can make sure you keep your contacts and other important data during a factory reset. You want to use a strong passcode to prevent unauthorized access to your device.
