The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) states that toll-free phone numbers are in public domain and therefore cannot be sold legally for profit ("brokering"). The agency prohibits all practices contrary to this idea. In a recent court deposit responding to small business owners looking for a more loose regulation, the FCC clarified its guidelines. Among these: the numbers without toll must be assigned on a first level basis, previously served. Subscribers are only allowed to subscribe to the amount of numbers without toll that they intend to actually use. RespOrg cannot reserve a number without first identifying a user. The practice of reserving numbers and not assigning them is known as "feel. "To avoid embarrassment, the FCC sends a RespOrg to assign a reserved number within eight months.[source: Federal Communications Commission court document on Toll Free Administration, CC Docket n. 95-155] Despite FCC regulations, the sale of profit numbers was a common practice, especially in the case of vanity numbers [source: Interview with Bill Quimby, 20 February 2008]. A number of vanity is one that writes a memorable word or phrase on the numerical keyboard. Here are some cases of individuals and companies that sell numbers without toll for profit. The number of vanity 1-800-GREATRATE sold for $8,600 on eBay. The owner of a Mercedes dealership in Minnesota won a case brought against him by Mercedes Benz USA who was trying to buy his 800-MERCEDES green number from him. A number of vanities with a Beverly Hills area code sold for $349.99 on eBay. Sichuan The airline purchased the number 888-888-88 for $28,000 in a charity auction. (Chinese consider "8" a lucky number.)(source: "Despite illegitimateness, Bid Premium Sums Companies for the award-winning phone numbers," Knight Ridder Tribune Business News, 9 March 2004)Bill Quimby, founder and president of TollFreeNumbers.com, said that many phone companies inadvertently hoard numbers through the wrong pure management. "As phone numbers are invisible, it is very easy to lose track," he said. "The respOrgs can be very disorganized, and there is no cleaning system in the SMS/800" [source: Interview with Bill Quimby, 20 February 2008]. He also said that many people find ways around FCC regulations, and that supervision is weak at best. " FCC was not very diligent in paying attention to anything in the business without toll," he said. "There are a lot of vanity companies that use very subtle excuses or technicalities to bypass regulations. It's finally wrong, but FCC didn't do anything. "Now that we have a sense of what is happening in the industry without toll, let's take a look atof the toll-free vanity numbers and provide some advice on how to get a good one. They were everywhere he looked: inside his minivan, on other people's minivans, in traffic, in parking lots. He saw them on vacation. But he wasn't ready to stand up and let the American windshields become invaded by white spots created by bad road toll transponders. He wanted to give people the freedom to make personal generic transponders. Become a member to get unlimited access and support the voices you want to hear more. Sign up for Entrepreneur October 1 à The extreme stress experienced by Wall Street to Main Street since September 15 is rippling in the nonprofit and philanthropic sectors, and will hit some organizations more like a tsunami. Nonprofits know two things: that their budgets are highly vulnerable, and that the people they serve will be affected. Hardly. Here are my recommendations: For non-profits: The committees are now more than ever important. You have to take your advice. This is not the time for foot-dragging with board members who do not care to attend council meetings, make contributions, or ask for more money. Now is the time for sitting tables to sitwith the CEO, make sure that the organization has a convincing mission (the reason why you exist, the value you add), make sure that the organization has a convincing vision (where you are bringing the organization in the coming years), and determine how to achieve success "strategically and financially." The role of the CEO is essential in providing the necessary experience to prepare the advice for this conversation. The boards of directors must be composed of persons from different contexts and networks to ensure full and thorough understanding of the needs and interests of the community, the creation of a solid strategy and strong support. If the composition of the board has to be strengthened, be careful of this, and build the council. Each member of the board must be productively involved in contributing to the vision and support for the organization of its networks. And every single member of the board must make a contribution that is personally generous! The agenda of the Council meetings must focus on key organizational and strategic issues: "what was done after the previous meeting, what must be done on the path to vision, and what must be done by the Council. (A good preparation is essential for a good board of directors.) The CEO must be excellent "a highly effective professional, expert in the needs of the community and the work of the organization, and effective in building relationships with the main components and financiers. An excellent leadership of the board is also fundamental "an excellent chairman of the board who acts as a model for members of the board, along with good officials and committee presidents. For companies and foundations: Investing in organizations that are having the greatest impact in making communities stronger and more sustainable. And, yes, invite organizations to show how they are achieving significant results. Expect the edges and CEOs of nonprofit organizations that you finance to perform well as indicated above. You can leverage your support to pressure tables to get involved and support. You will help the organization and community. For businessmen who choose boards: Choose the boards where you can add value to promote a meaningful purpose for you. Once you join the board, help him imagine the most potential of the organization, build a vibrant income model and achieve success. Be generous! These will be the most difficult times for non-profit organizations to access revenue, but there will still be a flow of funds from governments, companies, foundations, individuals and taxes. Dollars will be diverted to organizations that have CEOs andadministration who make sure their missions are relevant, their staff is providing high quality and meaningful programs, and their advice is generous and fully committed to building relationships and supporting. support. support. support.
